the play.

Was it due simply to the fact that all these people were present at the last public appearance—as advertised—of a star of unusual populacity? Whitaker wondered; or was there something else in their minds, something deeper, and more profoundly significant?

Max slipped quietly into the box and handed his guest a program. "Better get over here," he suggested in a hoarse whisper, placing a chair near the rail. "You'll never have another chance to Whitaker received an impression as of a tremendous force at work across the footlights. The woman diffused an effect as of a terrible and boundless energy under positive control. She was not merely an actress, not even merely a great actress; she was the very soul of the drama of today.

Beyond this he knew in his heart that she was his wife. Sara Law was the woman he had married in that she woman he had married in that she woman he had married in that she py Connecticut town six years before that night. He had not seen her face clearly, but he knew. To be proved mistaken would have shaken the foundation of his understanding.

Under cover of the applause he turned to Max.

"Who is that? What is her name?"

Which he knew he shared with the audience—with its source, in fact.

The opening scene in the development of the drama interested the gathing little or not at all; it was hanging in suspense upon the unfolding of some exsults confidences at their suspense upon the unfolding of some exsults.

"The divine Sara," Max answered, his eyes stining.

"I mean what is her name off the stage, in private life."

"The same," Max nodded with conviction. "Sara Law's the only name she's ever worn in my acquaintance with her."

viction. "Sara Law's the only name she's ever worn in my acquaintance with her."

At that moment, the applause having subsided to such an extent that it was possible for her to make herself heard, the actress swung round from the mirror and addressed one of the other players. Her voice was clear, strong and vibrant, yet sweet; but Whitaker paid no heed to the lines she spoke. He was staring, fascinated, at her face.

Sight of it set the seal of certainty upon conviction; she was one with Mary

Ordinary mercolized wax serves all the purposes of creams, powders and rouges, giving far better results. It actually peels off an offensive skin, at the same time unclogging the pores. Minute particles of scarf skin come off day by day, causing not the least pain or discomfort. Gradually the healthy, younger skin heneath peeps out, and in less than a fortnight you have a loveller complexion than you ever dreamed of acquiring. What is believed to be the fastest record for sustained road driving under unfavorable conditions, was completed yesterday when William R. McCulla landed in Detroit with his new Packard "3." He started from Chicago, being checked out at 2:30 a. m. and at 9:29 a. m. he reached the Pontchartrain Hotel in Detroit and was checked in.

The distance was 24 miles, which was made in elapsed running time of seven hours and nine minutes. There were three stops for gasoline and tires, which occupied a total of fifteen minutes.

The actual running time, therefore, was six hours and fifty-four minutes, making the wonderful average for the entire distance, of a little more than forty-one miles per hour.

This is an extraordinary record that it is believed has never been equaled under any circumstances; and when the frozen, ruity condition of the mud and gravel roads over which the Packard "3" traveled, are taken into consideration, the record made was a marvelous endurance test on the part of both driver and car.

St. Louis, Mo., July 20, 1912.-"We noticed small lumps breaking out on my oldest boy's legs. They started to spread, and then sores broke out all over his face. The sufferings were terrible. One of the remedies we used was ----, which is very widely advertised for eczema, but this irritated the sores so badly that the child couldn't stand the pain. Finally our physician recommended Resinol Ointment, which immediately cooled and gave the child relief. So I got a cake of Resinol Soap and used it for his bath, and in a week's time his skin was clear and all of the sores were healed." (Signed)
